

Riders of the Week

January 30 – February 3

Jason Arcibar had been chosen for Rider of the Week by Jessica Gipson. His favorite movie is Fast and the Furious and for fun he likes to play soccer, football, and basketball. Jason's role model is his dad because he is always willing to help anyone. When he grows up Jason wants to be a mechanic for the army. Jason's teacher says, "I look forward to having Jason in my class every day because I know that he is going to challenge me as a teacher. Jason listens and pays attention to everything that we say, do, and practice in writing class, and then goes into his other classes and looks for examples of what we've done in here. He is super awesome at spotting creative things that authors do that aren't in the grammar mold, and he always asks why and how things work. When it applies, he uses some of those techniques to add voice to his writing and he executes it almost perfectly. When he's not being a super student for me, he's being a super friend and classmate to his peers, assisting them in any way necessary. He makes 4th period a welcomed time of the day."

Dianna Camacho has also been chosen for Rider of the Week by Jessica Gipson. Her favorite book in history is about presidents and for fun she likes to play tag. Her role model is her dad because he gives her advice and helps her do outdoor activities like hunting. When she grows up Dianna wants to be a detective and solve crime. Her teacher says, "Dianna is one of the best people I have ever met, meaning her awesomeness is not limited to just her classroom performance. She is a person that wants to do well in all areas, whether it is becoming a better student academically or being a good citizen within her school community. The thing I love the most about Dianna is how she is always genuinely surprised by her success. We set goals in writing class, and every time she meets or exceeds one, she is humble. As a teacher, it is a privilege to watch Dianna in class every day. I am positive that her star is only going to get brighter and brighter."
