

Riders of the Week

February 20 – February 24

Amerison Shrestha

Amerison Shrestha has been nominated for Rider of the Week by Doug Moore. His favorite movie is Wolf on Wallstreet because he finds the motif interesting. He loves to watch television, specifically basketball games. His parents are his role models because they have cared for and done so much for him. When Amerison grows up, he says “I would really like to become a successful businessman. Currently, I am hoping to find some degree in Business Administration and work my way up from there. I really enjoy the business field because it is very compelling in the aspects of finance, stocks, different types of business, and the people involved.” Mr. Moore says, “I like students that want to learn and who are intellectually curious, and Amerison is one of those kinds of students. He is a hard worker in class and is involved in things outside of class. Plus, he has some of the neatest work you will ever see!”

I’Ceyonna Ware has also been chosen for Rider of the Week by Doug Moore. She loves doing jigsaw puzzles and reading her favorite book, Winter of Fire by Sherryl Jordan. Her role model is Amanda Stenberg. I’Ceyonna wants to “be as powerful and influential as she is when it comes to fighting for women’s rights and racial equality.” When I’Ceyonna graduates, she wants to pursue a career in pediatric oncology because she wants to help the many children that are effected by cancer. Mr. Moore says, “I’Ceyonna is one of the hardest working students around that most no one notices. She never draws attention to herself, but she always seems to get things done. She is always pleasant and polite.”
